Airbus to meet with European Works Council on 7 March 2018

- To address expected rate reductions on A380 and A400M programmes and workforce implications

Toulouse, 5 March 2018 – Senior management representatives of Airbus (stock exchange symbol: AIR) will meet with the European Works Council on 7 March 2018 to explain previously announced rate reductions on the A380 and A400M programmes and to discuss associated implications for the workforce.

Airbus has a policy of first addressing workforce issues with its social partners before any public disclosure. The company will continue to abide by this policy.

Airbus deeply regrets that the process on the current subject matter has been disturbed by leaks to the media, which resulted in excessive reporting about alleged job cuts in its four home countries.

Airbus is committed to managing any social implications in a responsible manner and has demonstrated its ability to find the best possible solutions for its workforce on various occasions in the past.

Only after its initial meeting with the European Works Council on 7 March 2018, Airbus will provide further details on the company's plans and considerations.
